I did not grow up in Texas, but we came here often to visit family. My parents, two brothers, and I, had a full schedule of everyone we “have-to-see” during our short visits. Camilo and Lucy’s house was one of our routine stops. I was a young boy but I still recall Lucy’s smile and kindness. Years later, I joined the military so my trips to Texas became less frequent. During one of those rare visits, Lucy said (in Spanish) “I recognize you but I don’t know which one you are.” She meant, which one of the three boys. I responded, (in Spanish) “I am the middle one, Steve, the handsome one”. Lucy laughed and commented, “Okay, now I know who you are.” My stays were never more than a few days and became less frequent, but on each rare encounter she would always indulge me with the same greeting, “I recognize you but I don’t know which one you are.” I would respond in kind with my routine wisecrack, to elicit a smile. Lucy, I know you remember me and I will never forget your kindness and smile.
