Memorials

Sandy was the one person who accepted me when I was young and couldn't hear. She recognized disabilities. We were friends for many years and then drifted apart. When I found her again several years ago, it was if we had never been separated. I loved her so much. She accepted me as I was and I accepted her as she was. She had a very hard life, but she still remained sweet and loving. She was also smart. She wasn't able to receive her education, but she was amazing at critical thinking. When I talked to her these last few years, she would come up with answers that were so creative, due to her critical thinking ability. Her last words to me were, "I love you Kathy." My last words to her were, "I love you so much Sandy." She is in heaven now with our God and loving Savior. I miss her and love her beyond words.
